IS IT FOR KIDS ?

Philosophy is a pretty thing if you engage in it moderately in your youth; but if you continue in it longer than you should, it is the ruin of any man. For if a man is exceptionally gifted and yet pursues philosophy far on in life, he must prove entirely unacquainted with all the accomplishments requisite for a gentleman and a man of distinction. Such men know nothing of the laws of their cities, or of the language they should use in their business associations both public and private with other men, or of human pleasures and appetites, and in a word they are completely without experience of men's characters. And so when they enter upon any activity public or private they appear ridiculous, just as public men, I suppose, appear ridiculous when they take part in your discussions and arguments.

I feel toward philosophers much as I do toward those who lisp and play the child. ... When one hears a grown man lisping or sees him playing the child, it looks ridiculous and unmanly and worth of a beating. I feel exactly the same about students of philosophy. When I see a youth engaged in it, I admire it and it seems to me natural and I consider such a man ingenuous, and the man who does not pursue it I regard as illiberal and one who will never aspire to any fine or noble deed, but when I see an older man still studying philosophy and not deserting it, that man is actually asking for a whipping. For such a man, even if exceptionally gifted, is doomed to prove less than a man, shunning the city center and market place, in which the poet said that men win distinction, and living the rest of his life sunk in a corner and whispering with three or four boys, and incapable of any utterance that is free and lofty and brilliant.

Of those who turn to philosophy, not merely touching upon it to complete their education and dropping it while still young, but lingering too long in the study of it, the majority become cranks, not to say rascals, and those accounted the finest spirits among them are still rendered useless to society by the pursuit.

OR GROWNUPS ?

You are right in affirming that the finest spirits among the philosophers are of no service to the multitude. But bid one blame for this uselessness, not the finer spirits, but those who do not know how to make use of them.

Do not trouble about those who practice philosophy, whether they are good or bad; but examine the thing itself well and carefully. And if philosophy appears a bad thing to you, turn every man from it, not only your sons; but if it appears to you such as I think it to be, take courage, pursue it, and practice it, both you and your house.

The state ought to take up this pursuit in just the reverse of our present fashion. At present, those who do take it up are youths, just out of boyhood, who in the interval before they engage in business and money-making approach the most difficult part of it, and then drop it. By the most difficult part I mean discussion. And toward old age their light is quenched more completely than the sun, for it is never rekindled. But with the advance of age, when the soul begins to attain its maturity, they should make its exercises more severe. For all things great are precarious and, as the proverb truly says, 'fine things are hard'.

The free man always has time at his disposal to converse in peace at his leisure. He will pass from one argument to another, and he does not care how long or short the discussion may be, if only it attains its truth. But the non-philosopher is always talking against time, hurried on by the clock; there is no space to enlarge upon any subject he chooses, but the adversary stands over him ready to recite a schedule of the points to which he must confine himself. He is a slave disputing about a fellow slave before a master sitting in judgment of some definite plea in his hand, and the issue is never indifferent, but his personal concerns are always at stake, sometimes his life. Hence he acquires a tense and bitter shrewdness; he knows how to flatter his master and earn his good graces, but his mind is narrow and crooked. An apprenticeship in slavery has dwarfed and twisted his growth and robbed him of his free spirit, driving him into devious ways, threatening him with fears and dangers which the tenderness of youth could not face with truth and honesty; so, turning from the first to lies and the requital of wrong with wrong, warped and stunted, he passes from youth to manhood with no soundness in him and turns out, in the end, a man of formidable intellect -- as he imagines.

AT WORK?

The Applied Philosophy Program at Bowling Green State University, from interviews with some 63 non-academic employers and some 200 non-academically employed philosophy doctors, determined skills that non-academic employers are looking for that have a relationship to the study of philosophy, and circulated the following list:

Research

- Locating sources of data
- Organizing information
- Collecting data

Communication

- Speaking cogently
- Explaining difficult concepts
- Writing clearly and concisely
- Listening critically for assumptions and implications of views
- Hearing and answering questions perceptively

Problem-solving

- Identifying and defining problems perceptively
- Anticipating problems before they arise
- Interpreting data from alternative perspectives
- Perceiving alternatives to present realities
- Evaluating alternatives critically
- Implementing solutions effectively

Value conflicts

- Identifying and defining value issues clearly
- Characterizing value conflicts from alternative perspectives
- Devising plans that accomplish goals more fully
- Establishing and justifying priorities
- Mediating between contending parties
- Easily translating from theories to workable applications

Organization

- Analyzing, breaking wholes down into their component parts
- Integrating diverse elements into a clear, coherent whole
- Identifying organizing principles for material to be analyzed

WHO DOES IT?

STUDENTS

Students in philosophy are of all ages and backgrounds. Fresh from Cegep, hurrying in from jobs, or newly retired, Asian visitors or Westmount gentry, of all official languages, they have been attracted by the problems, pleasure or promises of philosophy study.

They are frequently studying some other discipline, too, seeking that freshness and breadth which good employers recognize their philosophical astuteness brings to the practice of any occupation.

The aim of the Philosophy Students Association on our campuses is to further philosophy students' interests by providing academic and social programmes. It sponsors guest lecturers, discussions and open forums. It arranges outings at Lacolle Centre, sports events and parties on campus and in homes.

The association also provides an opportunity for extended informal philosophical discussions in the seminar rooms and reading rooms nearby professors' offices. The rooms contain student libraries, too.

Students are invited to participate in the determination of programmes and policy of the department. Representatives vote on matters arising in the departmental meetings, which are open to all, as well as on committees for library and curriculum, and special task forces such as committees for grade appeals in philosophy courses.

TEACHERS

The Philosophy professors all have long experience teaching in their courses at Concordia. All teach courses at the introductory level, as well as advanced courses in their research specializations.

ROGER ANGEL (Ph.D., McGill) is teaching Philosophy of Science, as well as Elementary Deductive Logic, Symbolic Logic and graduate Metalogic. His Relativity: The Theory and its Philosophy appeared 1980.

MOBIN AHMAD (Ph.D., Chicago) is offering courses in ethics, and in the History of Modern Philosophy on both campuses.

CHRISTINE ALLEN (Ph.D., Claremont), cofounder of Simone de Beauvoir Institute for women's studies, is teaching Ethics, Philosophy of God, and a new course in Philosophy of Dying and Living.

JOHN DOYLE (M.A., Montréal) is teaching Metaphysics, this year in both the graduate and the undergraduate programmes, as well as Ancient Philosophy.

EDMUND EGAN (Ph.D., Fordham) is teaching Philosophy of Man, and its more specific version as Human Identity. He is teaching a graduate Philosophy of Art, as well as interdisciplinary Aesthetics as a fellow of the Liberal Arts College.

STANLEY FRENCH (Ph.D., Virginia) published Philosophers Look at Canadian Confederation in 1979. As Concordia's Dean of Graduate Studies, he is not teaching philosophy this year. He is a fellow of the Simone de Beauvoir Institute.

CHRISTOPHER GRAY (Ph.D., Catholic U.; LL.B., B.C.L., McGill) will teach undergraduate Legal Philosophy and a graduate focus on Human Rights. Besides Philosophy and Society, he will also add a new course, The Meaning of Life.

ERNEST JOOS (Ph.D., Montréal) published La scholastique: certitude et recherche in 1980. In the fall he will be researching Georg Lukacs in Hungary, and in the second term teaching Medieval Philosophy plus a graduate course on Heidegger.

ANDREW KAWCZAK (Ph.D., Warsaw), now preparing a book on Toynbee's philosophy of history, has published on logic and on philosophical anthropology. He will teach Critical Theory and Philosophy of History. He is Chairman of the Philosophy Department.

DALLAS LASKEY (Ph.D., Harvard) is teaching Phenomenology, with a specialization on Husserl in the graduate phenomenology course. He is coteaching Nineteenth Century Philosophy and Metaphysics. He is Graduate Programme Director in Philosophy, and leads the departmental research seminar in ethics.

HENRI LAU (D.E.S., Saulchoir; M.A., Montréal) teaches Philosophy of Education, carrying its expertise into the post of departmental Advisor to Philosophy Students.

JOHN MC GRAW (Ph.D., Angelicum) will teach his course on Contemporary Theories of Love, while preparing a book on its philosophical aspects. He is a fellow of Lonergan College.

SHEILA MULLETT (Ph.D., Purdue) teaches Analytical Philosophy, Critical Thinking, and a course in Law, Liberty and Human Rights. She is Advisor to philosophy students on the downtown campus, and in the Independent Studies Programme, as well as a fellow of Science College. She is treasurer of the Société de philosophie du Québec.

VINCENT MC NAMARA (Ph.D., Laval), after teaching Logic in summer school, will spend this year in Spain continuing research on the political philosophy of several Spanish and German thinkers.

DENNIS O'CONNOR (Ph.D., St. Louis) will conduct the Philosophy of Man, and offer Philosophy of the Social Sciences to graduate students. He is currently Chairman of the Undergraduate Studies Committee, and a fellow of Lonergan College.

JACK ORNSTEIN (Ph.D., California) is teaching in Philosophy of Mind, one course undergraduate and an advanced to graduates. He published The Mind and the Brain in 1972. He is a fellow of the Liberal Arts College.

DESIREE PARK (Ph.D., Indiana) is on leave in England this year, continuing work published in two books on Berkeley and in Complementary Notions on epistemology.

MARTIN REIDY (Ph.D., Toronto) will teach Ancient Philosophy, and the graduate course in Aristotle. His course in classical philology upon texts of Aristotle is being offered through the Classics Dept.

VLADIMIR ZEMAN (Ph.D., Prague), in addition to acting as Assistant Dean in Humanities, will be teaching Nineteenth Century Philosophy, and the graduate course in Kantian schools. As well, he will teach Methods of Enquiry, and conduct seminars for students of the Liberal Arts College, of which he is a fellow.

INTRODUCTION TO LOGIC

Loyola Campus

Vincent McNamara

This course is divided into three parts: language, deduction and induction. The uses of language, informal fallacies, and definition, are treated under language; propositions, syllogism, symbolic logic, and quantification theory are treated under deduction. Analogy and probable inference, experimental enquiry, science and hypothesis, and probability are treated under induction.

This course is an elective for non-philosophy as well as philosophy students. At least one half of classroom time will be given to practical exercises and the other half to lectures.

The objective of this course is to help students acquire methods and habits of logical reasoning.

PROBLEMS IN PHILOSOPHY

Loyola Campus

D. O'Connor

This course aims at introducing students to problems in three areas: knowledge, morals and reality. We'll be concerned with clarifying stumbling blocks to straightforward progress when we ask: what do I really know? What is knowing? How is knowing tied to perceiving, to evidence, to belief? What is worth doing? What is the nature of responsibility, of duty? Can we rationally or objectively decide what's good or right? What is real? What does 'being realistic' mean?

We will pursue these questions, these problem areas by way of reading and responding to three philosophers (René Descartes, Hannah Arendt, and Richard Taylor).

Class will follow a lecture-discussion format.

TEXTS: Discourse on Method, Descartes; The Human Condition, Arendt; Metaphysics, Taylor.

Evaluation: There will be 2 or 3 short essays, perhaps 2 class quizzes and a final term paper. The essays will be worth about 30%, the quizzes 20%, and the term paper about 50%. Class participation and work in the conference will be considered in assigning a final mark.

In this course we will select, from among the many contemporary philosophical discussions, those concerned with social and political questions. In order to deal with such issues it will be necessary to consider certain claims concerning the nature of the universe (metaphysics), what can be known (epistemology) and the nature of man (psychology). But the primary focus of interest will be man's relation to man, as described by different philosophers working within different conceptual frameworks.

The requirements of this course will be: one final test, in class, based upon study question handed out in advance (50%) and one term paper (50%). The method of teaching will consist of lectures followed by question and discussion periods.

This course aims at introducing students to philosophy and its history. Philosophy, i.e., systematic, radical reflection and expression, is understandable only by doing it. Accordingly, students will be encouraged to think about, reflect upon, sort out a wide range of topics.

To fulfil these aims we'll attempt to understand or read carefully some very impressive mentors: Plato, Aristotle, Aquinas, Hobbes, Nietzsche, Kant, Hegel and Sellars.

Class format will be lecture-discussion focusing on the readings and questions stemming from the readings.

TEXT: A text of readings will be available in the bookstore.

Evaluation: brief essays on the readings, 50%; final term paper or exam, 50%.

S.G.W. Campus

A critical examination of attempts by contemporary philosophers to answer such questions as the following: Are we free or determined? Is there a God? What is the mind? What makes anything right or wrong? What makes something true? What can we really know?

It is expected that students will not only acquire some knowledge of what philosophers have said about these issues, but will also think critically about them on their own. Thus some discussion in class and in conferences is an integral part of this course. A collection of articles by leading philosophers will be used in this course. The lecture-discussion will be based on reading selected from this work.

Cf. pp. XI-XIV of the textbook. While authors from the various philosophical periods are considered, emphasis is placed mainly on contemporary authors and issues.

The contents of the course are divided as follows:

- A. INTRODUCTION: on analytic and integrative academic pursuit as well as a vehicle for self-actualization and an authentic philosophy of life.
- B. PART ONE: On Being Human
 - I. The Nature of Human Nature
 - II. Consciousness, self-consciousness, and transcendental consciousness
 - III. Language and Human Reality
 - IV. Freedom
 - V. Ethical considerations
 - VI. Philosophy of Religion and the Existence of God
 - VII. Death
- C. PART TWO: Social Dimensions
 - I. Individualism and Community
 - II. Freedom and Social Control
 - III. Equality
 - IV. Love and Sexuality
 - V. Suffering, Injustice and Responsibility
 - VI. Ecology and the Ethics of Science
 - VII. Social Change and Revolution

The goals include the elements of "self-actualization" and authenticity (cf. texts to be distributed in class) which in turn require achieving a dialectic among the following:

- (a) An OBJECTIVE understanding of the readings of the textbook (cf. below);
- (b) a SUBJECTIVE and personal appropriation of the readings;
- (c) and an INTERSUBJECTIVE dialogue with the members of the class.

A lecture-class discussion will be the customary procedure but a variety of methods will be employed including less formal meetings such as at Lacolle.

A recommended first philosophy course for all interested students. It may constitute a prerequisite for higher level philosophical courses.

INTRODUCTION TO PHILOSOPHY

S.G.W. Campus

M.M. Ahmad

This course is intended for students who have had no previous contact with philosophy and are interested in finding out what philosophy is generally about and what it has to offer. The general plan is to make a careful study and achieve a reasonable understanding of some of the fundamental problems and the various ways in which they have been dealt with. Some sample problems are as follows: "Are there basically different kinds of things in the World (material objects, minds, souls)?" "Is there some ultimate source of everything that exists (God)?" "How knowledge is possible, what are its varieties and sources?" "Is man capable of autonomous action or are all his thoughts and actions mere products of influences beyond his control?" "What is the basis of the distinction between morally good and bad?" etc.

The study will enable the student to see the origin of philosophizing in an effort on the part of human beings to make sense of things and to obtain a perspective on themselves in relation to the rest of the World. It may stimulate a desire for further exploration of various developments in philosophic thought, creating an urge to emancipate oneself from irrational beliefs and attitudes and develop a new orientation to life and the World.

A recommended first philosophy course for all interested students. May constitute a prerequisite for higher level philosophy courses.

This course is a survey of the elementary portions of deductive logic. It includes the analysis of categorical propositions and the classical categorical syllogism. It proceeds to develop a system of natural deduction for propositional logic and concludes with an examination of the rudiments of monadic predicate logic. Its objective is to introduce the student to the types of techniques and approaches that are employed in formal logic, and to make him aware of the differences between the traditional and contemporary approaches to logic.

This course is an introduction to philosophy through social concerns. Each section opens with a popular statement of current issues (such as violence, freedom of information, labour strife, refugees' aid, censorship, separatism.)

The claims about social existence which underlie these issues are dis-entangled. This is done by seeking, first, what we might have in common (nature, individuality, personhood), and then what varieties of community might arise (familial and religious communion and "the social", expressive communication, national commonplaces, political commonweal). On these descriptions depend, at each point, judgments of social worth (progress or decadence).

There is no prerequisite. This course is useful also for students of social studies. Discussion and lecture upon texts will be used.

INTRODUCTION TO SPECIAL TOPICS IN PHILOSOPHY:

Special topic: THE MEANING OF LIFE

C. Gray

S.G.W.. Campus

This course is at the level of an introduction to philosophy. It is a reflection on the breadth and details of our search to give or find meaning in the experiences of our lives. It is not a philosophy of biology, or organic self-maintenance; nor is it a semantic investigation of communicative signification, of meaning (although these will not be irrelevant).

Why do we pose such a question as 'Does my life have any meaning?' What sort of answer would satisfy us? Is becoming satisfied of any relevance to ending the search? Is the inquiry even possible? If so, how is it best stated? What sort of answers to the question can there be? What sort have been offered, and developed more fully? Are those answers, and their presuppositions as well as their behavioural outcomes, coherent? correct? sufficient?

TEXTS: The Meaning of Life: Questions, Answers, Analysis, eds. S. Saunders and D.R. Cheney, Prentice-Hall pbk., 1980, sets the movement for reflection, with readings from the writings of well-known (Tolstoy, Schopenhauer, Camus) and workaday philosophers (Stace, Baier, Taylor, Edwards, Hare, Barnes, He pburn, Nielsen, Nagel). Philosophy and the Meaning of Life by Karl Britton, Cambridge pbk., 1969, will be read throughout. The humanistic bent of these texts is not necessarily the tenour of reflections upon them.

Evaluation: Not the correctness of opinions or the value of attitudes will be evaluated, but rather students' accuracy of information and acquired ability to support opinions or penetrate attitudes by appealing to root principles with coherent movement comprehensibly expressed in: 1 termpaper, due last class, considering one position, 40%, plus 1 midterm test, 25%, and one final test, 25% non-cumulative, with regular class discussion upon reading pre-read, 10%.

The general aims of this course are to show: (1) how in the ancient world distinctively philosophical problems were formulated; (2) how the various branches of philosophy were formulated; (3) how divergent doctrines and schools of thought evolved.

Content:

PART ONE: THE PRE-SOCRATICS

- Chapter 1. How physics grew from Cosmogony.
2. How mathematics ambitioned to become the whole of philosophy.
 3. How metaphysics and dialectic arose in oppostion to mathematics.
 4. How fifth-century physicists tried to resolve the dilemmas posed by the dialecticians.

PART TWO: THE ATHENIAN PERIOD

- Chapter 5. How, when the interest of man's minds shifted from nature to politics, the logic of events was the death of Socrates.
6. How Plato turned the Socratic method to new problems as well as old.
 7. How Aristotle turned his attention to resolving paradoxes and dilemmas left by Plato and founded the sciences of logic and biology.

PART THREE: LATER GREEK PHILOSOPHY

- Chapter 8. How the major schools of philosophy were formed.
9. How Greek philosophy ends with Plotinus' synthesis of Platonic and Aristotelian doctrines.
 10. How Greek philosophy became assimilated into Judaic and Christian Theology.

Teaching Methodology: Lectures and discussion.

A topical analysis of love and attendant phenomena with emphasis on their metaphysical, epistemological, psychological, ethical, aesthetic, religious, sociological, and theological dimensions. The course is, therefore, essentially philosophical in nature but is interdisciplinary as well.

Some of the problems considered are:

- (a) the conceptual and linguistic meanings of love;
- (b) the types of knowledge, if any, involved in love;
- (c) the origins, kinds, properties, and consequences of love;
- (d) the relationship of love to the following:
 - (1) freedom;
 - (2) maturity;
 - (3) self-actualization;
 - (4) union with the other(s);
 - (5) value formation;
 - (6) respect, admiration, esteem and justice;
 - (7) benevolence and community;
 - (8) individualism and community;
 - (9) sympathy, empathy, kindness, liking, hate, jealousy, envy, fear; loneliness and other essentially emotional and affective phenomena;
 - (10) volition and choice;
 - (11) the meaning of life and death.

Format: Although this is somewhat flexible, a lecture-discussion procedure will be customary.

LEGAL PHILOSOPHY

Christopher B. Gray

NW 14.45-16.00

S.G.W. Campus

This course is a reflection upon law, as citizen and lawyer experience it.

Is law a bundle of arbitrary and disconnected events, or does it have orderliness to it? In what way does it compel our actions and how far can this go? Does it have any moral role to play, beyond a sheer ideology of power?

What does it mean to have legal rights? Does property right affront our personhood? When do we become liable to have the institutions of law respond to our acts, and how can we justify our escape? How does one reason with the law?

The reflection is carried out by enlightening concrete situations with theoretical argument. The situations are found in caselaw, the theory in accompanying essays. For example, cases on legal community are fortified by writings on civil disobedience, etc.

Lecture and discussion upon readings is the method. Debate will be employed if the class is numerous enough.

This course is open to all students, with no prerequisite. It is recommended, in addition, for students in philosophy and in social studies, as well as for members of the public affairs college.

LAW LIBERTY AND HUMAN RIGHTS

Sheila Mullett

In this course we will examine three fundamentally different philosophical traditions underlying current discussions of law, liberty and human rights. The first philosophical world view, the Natural Law theory, defends the idea that there is a foundation for the laws of any society which exists independently of the will of man and can be known by man and appealed to by men as a means of evaluating existing man-made laws. The second, alternative view, maintains that all law is man-made and can be evaluated by the criterion of Utility. A third, and different perspective, the Marxist view, criticizes both the Natural Law view and the Utilitarian view on the grounds that these are the expressions of the ideology of a dominant class. The aim of this view is to expose ideological manipulation and to provide the means of analyzing a given social situation, and set of laws, in order to see how that situation can be developed so as to achieve liberation of the exploited class.

PHILOSOPHY OF HISTORY
(Also given as History 390)

Andrew Kawczak

In the first term the course will examine the nature of historical knowledge and its relation to the social sciences. Special consideration will be given to the issue of objectivity and the interplay of subjective and objective elements in historiography. Hempel's positivistic model of historical explanation will be contrasted with Dilthey's hermeneutics and followed by an analysis of ideas developed by some recent authors such as Dray, Frankel, Nagel, Popper and Scriven.

In the second term the course will deal with the interpretation of the historical process and the search for meaning in history. Authors discussed will include Vico, Herder, Kant, Hegel, Comte, Mill, Buckle, Marx, Spengler and Toynbee.

MEDIEVAL PHILOSOPHY

Ernest Joos

The content of the course is best summed up in the title of Etienne Gilson's book, The Unity of Philosophical Experience. If there is a unity of philosophical experience, then there is, from historical point of view, continuity in philosophical speculations. Therefore, Medieval Philosophy fills the gap between Ancient and Modern Philosophy. It covers a very long period (from the 4th century to the 15th century) and it is the scene of feverish intellectual activity in all domains of philosophy - logic, epistemology, ethics - and holds all these disciplines together in the framework of a metaphysics which is either Platonic or Aristotelian in origin. The philosophy of Descartes, Hume and Kant can be properly situated only in contradistinction with the philosophical practices of the Middle Ages. Nominalism, rationalism, and anti-metaphysical attitudes of modern times and also contemporary currents are better understood if their opposition to previous ways of philosophizing is re-instated into the unity of philosophical experience from St. Augustine through Thomas Aquinas to Nicholas of Cusa.

The course will stress throughout the relevance of medieval problems to modern and contemporary philosophical issues.

Method of Teaching: interpretation of authentic medieval texts.

Texts:

MODERN PHILOSOPHY

M. M. Ahmad

This course is concerned with Continental rationalism and British empiricism, the two main streams of philosophical thinking in the 17th and 18th centuries, with particular reference to such central figures as Descartes, Leibniz, Locke and Hume. After considering the important influences which gave rise to modern philosophy, the main objective will be to bring out the distinctive characteristics of the methodologies of these philosophers, and to make a careful study of their contrasting views concerning human knowledge, causality, substance, God, mind and body and personal identity, etc. The course will lead the student, in his later studies, to a recognition of the influence of these philosophers in shaping the course of the subsequent philosophical development and also their significance for contemporary philosophy.

Prerequisites: six credits in philosophy or permission of the Department.

TEXTS:

An elective open to any student interested in phenomenology and its applications. Previous training in philosophy is helpful but not necessary.

The objectives of the course are threefold: (1) to acquaint the student with the fundamentals of Husserl's phenomenology, (2) to contrast the views of Husserl with those who modified and interpreted his work, such as Scheler, Heidegger, Sartre and Merleau-Ponty, (3) to survey some of the concrete applications of phenomenology in art, morals, religion, literary criticism, history and the social sciences.

In the first semester and part of the second the instructor will lecture on Husserl's phenomenology and its modifications. The course will then be conducted in seminar style with presentations of individual papers and discussion.

Prerequisite: one course in philosophy or permission of the instructor.

This course centers on metaethical problems much debated by the contemporary ethical philosophers. Some sample topics are as follows:

The meaning and nature of ethical concepts and judgements;
 logical derivability of evaluative statements from factual statements;
 the nature of morality or moral point of view;
 the controversy about the meaningfulness of the question "Why should I be moral?" and the controversy about the legitimacy of the rigid distinction between normative ethics and metaethics.

Prerequisite: Students are expected to be familiar with the ethical theories of such classical philosophers as Plato, Aristotle, Hobbes, Hume, Kant and Mill.

Texts: TO BE ANNOUNCED.

A seminar devoted to the study of the development of contemporary analytic philosophy.

We will begin with G.E. Moore's reaction to British Idealism and consider the alternative method used by him. We will examine the application of mathematical logic to language on the part of Bertrand Russell to see how it solved some philosophical problems at the cost of new ones. In addition we shall note the influence of both Russell and Moore on later philosophical analysis. The topics we will consider in the first term are as follows:

British Idealism and the reaction of Moore and Russell

Propositional Calculus

Moore's appeal to Common Sense as a method of philosophical analysis

Moore's concept of definition

Russell's Logical Atomism

Russell's theory of descriptions

Russell's theory of types as a solution to the paradoxes

The theory of Sense-Data as a solution to the problem of solipsism

Logical Positivism

Ordinary Language Philosophy

The Emotive Theory of Ethics as a solution to problems raised by Moore's "Naturalistic Fallacy" and the Positivists' Criterion of Meaning.

In the second term we shall consider attempts to remedy difficulties engendered by the narrow criterion of meaning of the Positivists.

This course is an attempt to base the recognition of rights upon features of moral personhood. It proceeds by the study of: the origins, history and distinctions of the concept of rights; some recent frameworks for justifying rights and for deciding what rights there are; and the current recognition of rights in principle and in practice.

The main emphasis will be upon the second phase, determining the place of rights in the moral universe of some major moral philosophers today (Melden, Hart, Wasserstrom, Dworkin, Fried, Gewirth, Rawls, Nozick, Hayek). Lesser emphasis is given to the place of rights in traditional frameworks, and in ancient, medieval and modern classical philosophies. And least attention will be given to the final dimension of rights' legal, political and social implementation.

TEXTS: A research bibliography will be available for assignments. Traditional and historical settings will be reserved as excerpts and The Philosophy of Human Rights, ed. Rosenbaum, Greenwood, 1980. On the second focus, each student will locate one major author's primary and secondary literature, beyond common texts of Melden, Human Rights, 1970, and Lyons, Rights, 1979, both Wadsworth pbk. Final materials reserved.

Evaluation: 1 critical note each upon 1st and 3d foci, at 20%;
One seminar presentation upon a major contemporary moralist, at 50%;
reading upon other seminar presentations as directed by authors, at 10%.
All papers are due at the time of treatment; nothing received after course.

The dapple-eared lily below thee; that country and town did
Once encounter in, here coped and poisèd powers;

Thou hast a base and brickish skirt there, sours
That neighbour-nature thy grey beauty is grounded
Best in; graceless growth, thou hast confounded
Rural rural keeping--folk, flocks, and flowers.

Yet ah! this air I gather and release

He haunted who of all men most sways my spirits to peace;

Of reality the rarest-veinèd unraveller; a not
